“ Your thoughts on today's subject, he can't hear you now, have been my own for some time and I have shocked/surprised and amused my close friends recently as I have set out to tell them that I love them, admire them whatever is true. I have decided to do this following my father's death and writing my thoughts down about him; fortunately he knew much of this, but I reflected on how often we do not stop to tell those closest to us what we think and how we value them. It is a good experience and releases the other person to be open too. Hopefully it will be a while before either my friends or I die and therefore this should not be a one off event but repeated from time to time. thank you
